ABSTRACT

This bibliography is intended to serve as a guide to information about women's participation in American politics. Emphasis is on materials published since 1965, but landmark works published earlier are also included. Many documents are from unpublished sources; information on obtaining them is available from the Center for the American Woman and Politics (CAWP). Citations include information on the following topics; women holding elective and appointive office or employed in government or public service; voting behavior, political attitudes, political participation, and socialization of women; women in the political parties; and women's election campaigns. Also included are a limited number of citations to materials on public policy issues related to women's rights such as the Equal Rights Amendment, abortion, child care, employment, education, and legal rights. Entries are arranged according to document type and are listed alphabetically by author or main entry. Periodicals are not indexed. A general subject index is provided. The bibliography is updated periodically. (Author/KSM)

The Center for the American Woman and Politics (CAWP) is a unique, timely research and educational center committed to increasing knowledge about American women's participation in government and politics. As the newest unit within the Eagleton Institute of Politics, Rutgers University, the Center programs reflect Eagleton's tradition of creating research and educational programs of high standards focused on American public life and government.

The Center believes in encouraging the full and effective involvement of women in American public life. National in scope, Center programs support the growth and strength of a truly representative government responsive to the needs of all citizens, female and male alike.

Center activities include: planning and testing model educational programs, generating and sponsoring research, convening conferences and symposia, publishing and disseminating information. By designing and sponsoring a variety of related programs, the Center serves a catalytic role in the development of important information about women's participation in government and politics.

Established in 1971 with the aid of a Ford Foundation grant to the Eagleton Institute, the Center for the American Woman and Politics seeks additional funds to support its programs. Neither the Center for the American Woman and Politics nor the Eagleton Institute of Politics is a lobbying organization. All programs undertaken by the Center and the Institute are non-partisan, and all donations are tax-exempt.

PREFACE

The Center for the American Woman and Politics (CAWP) intends this bibliography to serve as a guide to information about women's participation in American politics. It is hoped that by giving an idea of what is available and by implication what has not yet been done, this bibliography will stimulate new studies that will contribute to our knowledge of women's participation in public life and government.

Emphasis is on materials published since 1965, but landmark works published earlier are also included. CAWP's specialized collection on women and American politics contains many of the unpublished sources listed in the bibliography which may not be readily available elsewhere; inquiries are invited regarding this material.

Citations include information on the following topics: women holding elective and appointive office or employed in government or public service; voting behavior, political attitudes, political participation, and socialization of women; women in the political parties; and women's election campaigns. Also included are a limited number of citations to materials on public policy issues related to women's rights such as the Equal Rights Amendment, abortion, child care, employment, education and legal rights.

Entries are arranged by format (see CONTENTS) and are listed alphabetically by author or main entry. For the convenience of the reader, a general subject index is provided. The index should be used as a flexible guide to citations. Because many of the subject categories overlap, readers are advised to review the entire index. Periodicals are not indexed.

For retrospective coverage, the reader should consult Albert Krichmar's The Women's Rights Movement in the United States, 1848-1970: A Bibliography and Sourcebook, Rosaline Levenson's Women in Government and Politics: A Bibliography of American and Foreign Sources, and Morris Levitt's Women's Role in American Politics (see bibliography for detailed citation).

Since one of the purposes of the bibliography is to provide information about current materials, the Center plans to update the bibliography frequently. In order to make the bibliography as current and as comprehensive as possible, users are urged to submit references to additional published and unpublished research and to work in progress.
